The Power BI service is a powerful business analytics service. This is the end of the support time for your Power BI Free Edition membership. Latest News Hi All, We have started rolling out a series of changes to various parts of Power BI and Data Science to help provide a smoother user experience. These changes are launching over the next few weeks and will gradually become the default experience. Beginning Friday, March 8th, our Power BI implementation will change from a "BLOB" data store to use the Azure Cosmos DB service. This release also begins the transition to Cosmos DB from DocumentDB, which we will complete in the near future. I am here with you with some valuable insights of the past year for the Microsoft Power BI and Data Science. The past 12 months has been busy and it's been a year of exploration for all of us here at Microsoft. For Power BI, we saw the arrival of Power Query with our release of Power Query for Excel which is now the default tool for data preparation. This allows you to move data from almost any data source and do the translation for you. It allowed many to think about BI differently. We have seen many customers transition from editing data in spreadsheets and pivots to doing their data preparation in Power Query. You saw not only more data in Power BI, but now we also see very complex data visualizations. We now support multiple types of visualizations like pie charts, bar charts, line charts, map visualizations and so on. And for more of the year we have been working on enhancements and additional features to allow you to get to the data faster. For example, we have added the ability to upload data directly to Power BI from Azure DocumentDB, or from certain Azure Tables, Query, or DocumentDB. That's not all. We have added new connectors to Azure SQL databases and to Azure SQL Data Warehouse. You can now connect to from the new SQL databases in Azure. We have added new connectors to Azure Event Hubs and to Azure Logic Apps for data collection. We
